THE COAST SURVEY.

Seeing that attempts have been made recently to decry and disparage the operations of the Coast Survey and the ability of its Superintendent, we take pleasure in giving the remarks made by Sir Roderick Impey Murchison in presenting the Victoria Gold Medal to Professor Bache, at the Anniver-Bary Meeting of May 24, 1858, and published on page 232 of the Proceedings for the year 1858 .-- Nat. Int.

The Victoria or Patron's Medal has been adjudicated to Professor Alexander Dallas Bache for his successful labors in carrying out the great Coast Survey of the United States of America. This noble work owes its origin, we believe, to the suggestion of those enlightened statesmen, Jefferson and Gallatin, as early as 1807, and was supported in 1809 by the American Philosophical Society, when Mr. Hassler, an eminent geometer of Switzerland, then resident in the United States, was entrusted with its execution. But war, and the time required for the manufacture of the instruments, delayed the commencement of the work till 1816. Continuing the survey, with a brief interruption, to 1844, Mr. Hassler was then succeeded by our medallist.

Operations of this nature will of course have been made available for a correct delineation of all the surface of the interior; for it is manifest that every triangle referable to a known unit furnishes three decided bases with which others may be connected in any direction, as long as there remains a terra firma for the instrument to stand on; but these internal operations, being more of a domestic nature, do not appear to the Council to establish any distinct claim to the medal. The case, however, is very different when we come to consider the accurate delineation of such a coast as that of the United States, commencing at the State of Maine, comprising no less than eighteen States on the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico, besides others on the Pacific, and extending, as we are credibly informed, over not less than 30,000 miles. This number no doubt includes all the windings and indentations of the coast, and the interiors of its harbors the islands, &c.; for it is to be remarked that, by the especial provision of the Government of America, the duty is not confined to one class of persons, but is shared equally by military and naval men and civilians, all chosen for their fitness; whereby not only is the field for selection vastly expanded but a greater facility of correctly taking soundings and delineating shoals, harbors, and isolated rocks, is affor-

It would be impossible to do justice to an extensive work of this sort on an occasion like the present; but as the previous reports of this celebrated Coast Survey, from 1844 to 1855, inclusive, are in our library, those of our associates, and of the public generally, who wish to form an estimate of their value, can do so at their leisure, and they will see how vastly our medallist has pushed on this great work. They will assuredly then rise from the examination with the thorough conviction that, whether we regard the science, skill, and zeal of the operators, the perfection of their instruments, the able manner in which the Superintendent bas enlisted all modern improvement into his service, the care taken to have the observations accurately registered, his modest and unpretending demeanor, or the noble liberality of the Government, tempered with prudent economy, all unprejudiced persons must agree that the trigonometrical survey of the United States of America stands without a superior.

What, then, are we to say respecting the accurate delineation of this immense tract of coast, so much frequented by commerce, so important in every point of view to mankind at large, but that it is a great and universal boon conferred on all the inhabitants of this globe? We all benefit by the security of navigation: it is not the Government of the United States of America alone which derives an exclusive advantage from this admirable series of operations, but those who have most frequent access to the shores of the Atlantic and Pacific chiefly participate therein; and as Great Britain stands foremost amongst these, on whom can we so deservedly bestow one of our two royal gold medals this year?

The President then addressed his Excellency the American Minister in these words: "Mr. Dallas: Whilst I can truly say that the Council and myself rojoice in this opportunity of recording our sense of the high merits of Professor Bache, I have a peculiar satisfaction in being permitted to place the Victoria Medal of the Royal Geographical Society in the hands of your Excellency, with the request that you will convey it to your eminent relative.

"The grounds for making the award of the highest distinction which it is in our power to confer have been expressed in the terms sanctioned by the Council, but that document does not allude to other great qualities of a man who, besides his admirable Coast Survey, has so largely extended our knowledge on various subjects of scientific importance. I may here cite his delineation of the iso-magnetic curves both in Europe and America; his littoral and deep-sea soundings, which it is believed, will soon enable us to read off the natural history of the Gulf Stream and to calculate the periodicity and perturbations of the tides at given spots; and his many ingenious inventions, including a method of registering the pulsations of distant earthquakes.

"British philosophers, sir, have indeed long admired the progress of your accomplished relative, as I can personally testify; for when he visited our country in 1847, I had the grasification, on resigning the chair of the British Association to my esteemed friend, Sir Robert Inglis, to welcome Mr. Bache to our meeting at Oxford, where he presented to us some results of his great survey, and we did honor to ourselves by enrolling him among our honorary members.

"Lastly, sir, when I know how successfully he has recently been laboring to aid the accomplishment of the submarine electric telegraph which is to unite our countries; that this same individual is the great-grandson of the illustrious Benjamin Franklin, as well as the near relative of one of your leading statesmen: and that, bearing his honored name, he is your own nephew, I feel in common with my associates, that there never was an occasion on which the sympathies and just pride of our kindred nations were more thoroughly united than they are by the adjudication of the Victoria Gold Medal to Alexander Dallas Bache."
